1. The Soviet Army Language School is located on Tankovyi Proyezd 4, Moscow 33. It has four sections: translation, instruction, intelligence and correspondence. The correspondence course lasts four years, the other three, five years. A special two-year course is given for reserve army intelligence officers with good political records. Officer graduates of this school are eventually appointed to various positions requiring knowledge of foreign languages, such as translators, language instructors in military academies and cadet schools. Civilian students are also accepted at this school.

2. [] during a refresher course at Urushvye (5359N-2714E), about six kilometers from Minsk, I met a lieutenant who was a graduate of this language school. I cannot remember his name. At the school his main subject had been German but he had also studied English. Once, [] he told me and a friend of mine, [] that after graduation he had completed another two year course which apparently qualified him as a foreign intelligence agent. While taking the course, however, he did not know anything about his future assignment.
